Insuring your Most Valuable Asset...You

Your most important asset is not your home, your car, your jewelry or other possessions. It's your ability to earn a living. Think about it: All of your plans for the future—from buying a home to putting your kids through college to building a retirement nest egg—are based on the assumption you will continue to earn a paycheck until you retire. But what would happen if those paychecks stopped? That's where disability insurance comes in. It provides an income to you and your family if you are unable to work because of illness or injury.

Understanding the Risk of Disability

Who needs disability insurance? Just about anyone who has a job. The possibility of a disabling illness or injury may seem remote but statistics paint a different picture. Nearly one in three women can expect to suffer a disability that keeps them out of work for 90 days or longer at some point during their working years. For men, the odds are about one in four. One worker in seven can expect to be disabled for five or more years before retirement.

Your paycheck could stop arriving just as an illness or injury brings significant expenses for medical bills, physical rehabilitation or the cost of modifying your home to accommodate medical equipment. Missed mortgage payments could put ownership of your home in jeopardy. Falling behind on credit card and other bills could mean burdensome late fees and escalating finance charges. In fact, disabilities have caused nearly half of all mortgage foreclosures and a significant number of personal bankruptcies.

The financial consequences can be even more far reaching. A lengthy disability could literally cost you millions. A 25-year-old worker who makes $50,000 a year and suffers a permanent disability could lose $3.8 million in future earnings.

Sources of Disability Income Protection

Workers' Compensation If you're employed and suffer a disabling illness or injury, you might be able to count on Workers' Compensation insurance to replace some of your salary. All states require employers to provide Workers' Compensation coverage. It typically pays about two-thirds of your pre-disability income. But it only pays in cases where your illness or injury is related to your work. The vast majority of long-term disabilities, however, are not job-related (see chart below).

State Disability Insurance Programs A handful of states provide short-term disability coverage—typically for up to six

A New Home Saved from Disaster

Cindy and Matt Wrenn were days away from closing on their dream home when disaster struck. Cindy, 28, suddenly fell ill while teaching a real estate class and was rushed to the hospital. She was stricken with a brain aneurysm, and during surgery she suffered a stroke. With Cindy in critical condition and fighting for her life, the house closing seemed out of the question. It was unclear if Cindy would survive, let alone return to her job at a real estate title company. Matt's teaching salary wasn't enough, on its own, to qualify for the mortgage. Knowing how much the home meant to Cindy, Matt contacted his insurance agent, Gillian Lotz, who had helped the couple purchase disability insurance policies.

Lotz pointed out to the lender that the short-term disability coverage provided by Cindy's employer would cover 60% of her salary over the first 90 days of the disability, and the long-term benefits of her individual policy would replace 70% of her salary after that if she was still unable to return to work. With that, the loan was approved.

Cindy's recovery was nothing short of miraculous. A month after the stroke, Cindy was released from the hospital, and a few weeks later she moved into her new home in picturesque rural Maryland. Just three months later, Cindy was able to return to her job part-time. The income Cindy earned allowed her to move from a full to a partial disability claim.

Today, Cindy is no longer collecting disability benefits. She's in good health and owns her own title company. Matt is a state fire marshal. They also are proud parents of a year-and-a-half-old daughter, Sarah. Cindy still has disability insurance, so if disaster should ever strike again, she's covered. In fact, she still pays the same premiums that she paid before she became ill. "When you're in your twenties, you don't think of such things as disability insurance," says Cindy. "I'm so thankful that I had it."

A Plan with a Purpose

Dr. Chia Chang, a pediatrician from Petersburg, Virginia, earned a comfortable living and was a picture of good health. Yet, with a wife and two boys, he knew he needed to make sure the family's finances would always be secure.

Working closely with Jimmy Jacobs, CLU, ChFC, his financial advisor, Dr. Chang put together a comprehensive financial plan. It included life and health insurance, a Keogh retirement plan and annuities to provide for a comfortable lifestyle down the road. He also added disability insurance to the package, though he didn't think he would ever need it.

A few years later, at age 54, Dr. Chang was diagnosed with liver cancer. He immediately called Jimmy, who assured Dr. Chang that his wife, Shin, and his two college-age sons would be provided for financially. Though Dr. Chang was unable to work while being treated for cancer, his health insurance covered medical bills, and his disability policy, combined with withdrawals from his Keogh plan, replaced much of his previous income.

One year later Dr. Chang died. When the disability payments kept arriving, Shin thought it was a mistake. But Jimmy informed her that the disability policy included a provision that would pay another six months of benefits. With these payments and the life insurance proceeds, Shin was able to keep their home and invest in education for herself and her boys. Today, one son is a psychiatrist and another is a lawyer. Shin lives comfortably in a new home close to her eldest son, and she recently became a grandmother.

months—that workers pay for through payroll deduction. These states are California, Hawaii, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island, as well as Puerto Rico. For those who live in these states, this can be an important source of short-term income replacement.

Social Security The federal government administers a disability insurance program that covers most workers, but qualifying for benefits is far from a sure thing and the payment levels (determined by your salary and work history) are fairly modest. About 60% of applications for Social Security disability benefits are initially denied, and the average monthly payment for current beneficiaries, $1,004, is barely above the poverty line.

Employer-Sponsored Coverage The main source of disability income protection in the United States is coverage provided or sponsored by employers. Many employers, especially larger ones, provide their employees with group insurance coverage. There are two forms: short-term disability (STD), which replaces a significant percentage of your income for about three months in most cases; and long-term disability (LTD), which typically pays 40% to 60% of your base salary (pre-tax) for longer periods.

Often, employees are given the option to add to the baseline coverage that the employer provides. Some companies don't provide disability coverage but help their employees by giving them the opportunity to purchase coverage on a voluntary basis. With this type of program, employees, rather than the employers, pay the full cost of the coverage. A benefit of purchasing disability coverage at the workplace is that it's generally easier to qualify for than coverage purchased on your own. Check with your employer's human resources department or benefits manager to see what coverage and purchase options your company's plan provides.

FEWER THAN 1 IN 3 U.S. WORKERS IN PRIVATE INDUSTRY HAVE LONG-TERM DISABILITY COVERAGE THROUGH WORK

Long-term Disability Coverage	29%	40%	22%	11%

Individual Disability Insurance The most flexible and reliable source of coverage is an individual disability insurance policy you purchase on your own. A privately owned policy is portable, meaning you won't have to worry about losing coverage if you change jobs. Generally, most individual policies pay between 40% to 65% of your pre-disability gross salary. When paid with after-tax dollars, benefits are received income-tax free.

KEY TERMS

When considering your disability insurance needs, you should be familiar with the following:

Benefit level and period Disability policies usually pay from 40% to 65% of your pre-disability earnings at the time of purchase for a specified period of time. That period may run from one to five years, until age 65, or in some cases, for life.

Elimination period There usually is a waiting period, known as an elimination period, before benefits kick in. It's typically 30 days, 90 days or six months after a disability occurs. You can select the waiting period when you buy your policy. Opting for a longer waiting period reduces the premium cost.

Definition of disability Some policies pay if you're unable to perform the duties of your own occupation; others pay only if you can't work at any occupation for which you're reasonably qualified. In addition, some policies pay only for disabilities arising from an accident.

Extent of disability Some policies pay only if you are totally disabled. Others may cover partial disability for a limited time, but only when it follows a period of total disability for the same cause.

Residual benefits If you're unable to perform some aspects of your job, residual benefits allow partial disability payments based on the amount of your loss of income.

Guaranteed renewable One of two major types of disability policies. It means your policy can't be cancelled as long as the premiums are paid. Premiums can be raised for an entire class of policyowners but not for reasons related to your individual circumstances.

Non-cancelable The other major type of disability policy. These policies can never be cancelled as long as premiums are paid, and premiums are guaranteed not to increase.

Inflation protection You can typically add a cost-of-living adjustment rider to an individual disability insurance policy that increases benefits by a specified percentage after each year of disability. Though expensive, this option can be vital to maintaining your standard of living if you're out of work for an extended period of time.

How Much is Enough?

Will you be able to maintain your current standard of living if you become disabled? The easiest way to answer this question is to add up your monthly living expenses and compare them with the income you could expect from your existing disability coverage, plus any income you count on from other sources, such as personal savings. If your income from all sources won't be enough to support you and your family, consider buying additional disability insurance—either through work or on your own—to make up the difference.

Use our Disability Insurance Needs Worksheet as a starting point for your calculations. Some things to keep in mind when going through the numbers:

- Employer-paid disability benefits are typically taxable. Estimate the after-tax amount of these benefits when assessing your level of income.
- Benefits from your employer's group plan or a personal disability policy may be reduced by the amount of Social Security or other government benefits you're receiving.
- You may be eligible for disability payments from other sources, such as Veterans Administration, civil service benefits or your union's group disability plan. In addition, some auto insurance policies cover disability resulting from an auto accident. Some lenders also offer insurance that takes care of your loan payments if you become disabled.
